ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Many ADB staff, both past and present, have contributed to the production of the Biographical register and we would like to thank them for their help and encouragement. We particularly wish to acknowledge the work of the regional research assistants - Mike Bosworth in New South Wales, Mimi Colligan in Victoria, Joyce Gibberd in South Australia, Betty Crouchley in Queensland, Wendy Birman in Western Australia and Margaret Glover and Gillian Winter in Tasmania. We owe much to the enthusiastic efforts and stimulating ideas of Emma Grahame and to the word processing skills of Edna Kauffman.

We are most indebted to the generosity of those people who have deposited material in the Register files and who have allowed us to use their unpublished work, among them Meredith Foley, Judith Godden, Don McDonald and David Sissons.

As well, the staff of many libraries and archival institutions have smoothed our path by their patience and expertise: we are grateful for the use of the biographical indexes held by the State libraries and for the help given by the ANU Archives of Business and Labour and the Petherick Room staff at the National Library. We would also like to thank Terry Dixon for his help in the computer production of the index which accompanies Volume II of this Register.

INTRODUCTION

The Biographical register is a by-product of the preparation of the first twelve volumes of the Australian dictionary of biography.[1] A card index of biographical references, built up since the late 1950s as an aid to the publication of the Dictionary, now extends far beyond this basic function and encompasses material on many thousands more men and women than those deemed appropriate for a Dictionary entry. In 1959 and 1963 roneoed compilations of names and references, called 'short lists', were made available to libraries and favourably received. Since then many scholars and researchers have found our vastly expanded index indispensable. Publication of the Biographical register is an attempt to bring this resource to a wider public. It also brings to fruition the aim of Douglas Pike, the first general editor of the ADB, to publish 'ancillary lists of names brought to light by research, with dates, brief epitaphs, and references'.[2]

The 8100 entries in the Register approximately equal the number of entries and sub-entries that will be in volumes 1 to 12 of the Australian dictionary of biography and like their Dictionary counterparts deal with individuals from the chronological time span 1788-1939. The reader will find in these pages people from every State, from all walks of life, women as well as men, young and old, making a collection of the lesser-known who are none the less relevant to the study of Australian regional, institutional and family history.

To minimise duplication of the work of others we have excluded parliamentarians and limited the number of artists in the Register. Parliamentarians have been thoroughly dealt with in separate publications.[3] Artists are also well covered, especially by A. McCulloch in Encyclopaedia of Australian art (new edition 2 vols Melb. 1984) and C. Ambrus in The ladies' picture show (Syd. 1984). Otherwise, and unlike the Dictionary portraits, the sketches in the Register have not been selected on the basis of 'importance', representative nature, or topicality; instead they reflect the structure of the Dictionary's working index with its inherent strengths and weaknesses.

Readers must be cautioned against taking the Biographical register entries as fully researched statements on the men and women described; rather they should be used as the basis for individual investigation by the historical researcher or genealogist. The entry format, in three parts, is intended to facilitate this approach:

1. The first lines in each alphabetical entry are identifiers: they give the subject's name, leading occupation, main place associated with, birth, death and marriage details and name of father - or as many of these facts as could be ascertained from index sources and a limited amount of extra research. People with more than one name (married, maiden, pseudonym or other variations) are cross referenced. A cross reference system (of [q.v.]s and [ADB]s) also links the entries to each other and to Dictionary articles.

2. The second section gives a biographical outline. This summary, usually drawn from an obituary, has not been subjected to the same scrutiny as a Dictionary entry whereby the mistakes common in obituaries and old reference works are weeded out. Consequently the section may contain errors, contradictions or omissions and is best regarded as a starting point for further work rather than as a finished product. (We should be grateful if readers would supply us with such corrections as they unearth.)

3. The third section, the bibliography at the end of each entry, indicates sources of verification or extra information on the subject. References are specific. Knowledge of generally applicable material such as street and telephone directories, electoral rolls and public service lists has been assumed. We have not always included birth, death and marriage notices. These are easily checked in the main city newspapers, a list of which is to be found on p.xviii. Our references, to be used in conjunction with the list of abbreviations, will be self-explanatory, but there are a couple of traps. Readers should be alerted to the fact that each volume of Who's who in Australia up to 1955 includes an obituary list. Thus a person who died in 1948, for example, can legitimately appear in the next succeeding volume, in this case that for 1950, although not in the main section. Some elucidation of the method of citing parliamentary references may also be helpful. We have used the following sequences: title of volume, followed by year, volume number, paper number (no.), if any, and page number (p.) with any secondary pagination in brackets. For example NSW LA V&P 1899 5 p.126 (21) gives title, year, volume, page and secondary pagination; Vic. LA V&P 1858/9 2 no.16 p.3 gives title, year, volume, paper and page.

Some of the researchers who have come in person to use the biographical index at the Dictionary office have been interested in groups of people rather than specific individuals. This has prompted us to include an occupation category index as an appendix to the Register. As well, bibliographic items such as D.A. Cumming and G.C. Moxham They built South Australia (Adel. 1986) or N. Hall Botanists of the eucalypts (Melb. 1978), which are themselves collections of biographical entries, have been cited within entries in shortened form and with an asterisk and have also been brought together in a separate list on p.xiii. In this way we hope that readers interested in occupational groups, as well as those tracing individuals, will be introduced to relevant research sources.

It has taken several years for a small staff to compile and edit this Register. We have not been able to make an entry for every name in the cards and we know that many people will not find here the name they seek. Nevertheless, the accumulation of information proceeds all the time and readers are welcome to visit the ADB at the Australian National University and consult the index personally.

*BIBLIOGRAPHY OF COLLECTIVE BIOGRAPHICAL MATERIAL

The material listed here is denoted in the text by an asterisk.

The collections (both published and unpublished) contain biographical listings, generally alphabetically arranged. By using them the reader interested in categories or occupational groups of people will have access to information on a larger scale than is supplied in the Biographical Register.

The list is not intended to be comprehensive: it includes only the material used in the compilation of the Register. It is also limited to register-type collections, excluding monographs on particular categories of people, such as H. Porter Stars of Australian stage and screen (Adel. 1965) or W.A. Orchard Music in Australia (Melb. 1952), which contain detailed biographical information in another form.
